And the most intriguing piece of information I found in that section is this: "Untreated fevers caused by viral and bacterial infections do not rise inexorably and will not exceed 105 degrees." He explains that reducing the temperature will do nothing to make the child well, and that our bodies have a built-in mechanism, not fully explained, that will prevent an infection-induced temperature from reaching 107 degrees (the danger zone.) He goes on to say that, "Measures to reduce temperature, such as drugs or sponging, are worse than unnecessary; they are actually counterproductive." He goes on to explain the biological process of the immune system, which I will not get into but it is VERY good to know this as a mother
